Marie Brett

We all have amulets, those special objects often hidden away in drawers and cupboards which mark a significant time, occasion or person in our lives. Particular to infant loss, this poetic artwork links photographs of family amulets together with bereaved parent's whispered stories describing their amulet's meaning.

This potent exhibition draws the viewer into a special world of quiet reflection. The artwork is compelling, visually beautiful and inventively takes you to a place of intrigue and surprise. Intimate and universally relatable, you'll feel and think differently about loss after seeing this show.

'Thought provoking and moving... such emotive artwork, I have been very moved by the integrity and honesty of the exhibition. So glad to see this sensitive subject brought to life'
